

Image detection

By image detection we mean the recording of the surface or spatial distribution of certain physical parameters of the displayed scene and the conversion of this image function into another form of signal (e.g. an electrical signal), which has more favorable properties for further processing, display and storage. Image detectors (sensors) ensure the recording and transformation of the image signal. It is usually a two-dimensional array of a large number of suitable detection elements (transducers), which, in addition to the values of the displayed parameters of the scene, also provide spatial information about the exact location of the signal. Each detection element of the sensor records one image point (pixel) of the resulting image. For tomographic methods is the result of the detection of the so-called voxel (from the English Volumetric Pixel) – volumetric element of the image. In medicine, there are a number of commonly imaged scene parameters that can be recorded in a variety of ways.

Method	Physical parameter	Image detector
X-ray a CT imaging	X-ray attenuation	flat panel, photographic film, scintillation detectors ultrasound imaging	reflectivity, attenuation	piezoelectric crystals magnetic resonance	quantum behavior of atomic nuclei	coils nuclear medicine (PET, SPECT, gammagraphy)	activity of radionuclides	scintillation detectors, flat panel thermography	surface temperature (infrared radiation)	semiconductor detectors, liquid crystals elastography	Young's modulus of elasticity	piezoelectric crystals, coils electrodiagnostic mapping	electrical properties	electrode array magnetodiagnostic mapping	magnetic properties	array of coils microscopy, endoscopy	attenuation, reflection or scattering of electromagnetic radiation (UV, IR, VIS, microwaves)	semiconductor detectors electric impedance tomography (EIT)	electric conductivity, permittivity	electrode array

Links

Used literature

- SEDLÁŘ, Martin – STAFFA, Erik – MORNSTEIN, Vojtěch. Zobrazovací metody využívající neionizující záření [online]. Brno : Institute of biophysics, Faculty of Medicine, Masaryk University in Brno, 2013, Available from <http://www.med.muni.cz/biofyz/zobrazovacimetody/files/zobrazovaci_metody.pdf>.